Course objectives, teaching and learning methods and learning outcomes

The aim of the course is to gain knowledge about inter- and multidisciplinary approaches to interpretation of the process of creation of a tourist experience. Defining of experience as a multidimensional variable, as well as of the process of experience creation and management in/outside the tourist destination facilitates development of a methodological framework for systematic monitoring of direct and indirect impacts of modern tourism. Determining of needs, possibilities and advantages of relationships and phenomena brought about by emergence of tourism. Students acquire their skills independently.

Learning outcomes

- 1. Recognise, understand and explain the perspectives of experience in tourism;
- 2. Differentiate and understand interpretation of phenomena and processes in modern tourism:
- 3. Independently interpret impacts of social phenomena and processes related to tourism, as well as relationships of tourist trends on the quality of life, as well as predispositions for further professional and scientific training.
- 4. Analyse and understand the concept of creation of experiences in the tourism flow
