Agencies in European Banking

A Critical Perspective

Series: Palgrave Macmillan Studies in Banking and Financial Institutions

- Examines how NCAs interact, network and cooperate within agencies governing the EU banking sector
- Determines whether 'variable geometry' influences NCAs' interplay and whether it drives or inhibits actors' coordination
- Makes a timely contribution to the issue of NCAs institutional power within regulatory networks and to actual practices of EMU governance

This book studies relationship dynamics between National Competent Authorities (NCAs) within two agencies governing the European banking sector: the European Banking Authority and the Single Resolution Board. The analysis centres on NCAs policy preferences and the variety thereof, particularly in the context of banking market fragmentation (Euro area vs. non-Euro area countries/banking union "ins" and "outs"). The focus is not so much on the motivations of these preferences, but on the processes and mechanisms that help reach NCAs consensus on prudential matters. Through an interdisciplinary approach rooted in legal analysis and political economy, the book shows how national actors inform decision-making within European agencies in banking, and whether—and how—the reality of differentiated integration within the internal banking market challenges policy creation.
